Chatterbot app created by Outfit7 Talking AngelaDeveloper(s)Outfit7Publisher(s)Outfit7SeriesTalking Tom and FriendsPlatform(s)iOS, AndroidReleaseiOS: November 2011Android: January 2013Genre(s)Chatterbot Talking Angela is a chatterboter app developed by Slovenian studio Outfit7 as part of tom's talking and friends series. It was released on November 29, 2011 and January 2012 for iPhone, iPod and iPad, January 2013 for Android, and January 2014 for Google Play. [1] The show's successor, Angela's Man Talk, was released in December 2014. In February 2014, Thing Angela was the subject of an internet trick that claimed to encourage children to reveal personal information about themselves, which appeared to be used afterwards by paedophiles to identify the children's where location. The rumor, which was widely spread on Facebook and various websites claiming to be devoted to parenting, claims that Angela, the game's main character, wants the game's private personal information from the game user using the game's text-chat feature. [2] Other versions of the rumor even attribute the child's disappearance to the program.[3] or claim to be run by a paedophile ring, while some go so far as to even claim that the user was recorded by the camera and seen in Angela's eyes. [4] Rumor has been claimed to be true even by YouTubers and even on the app review page on the Apple App Store and Google Play Store, even though there are no confirmed reports of incidents being said to happen. [5] [6] Soon after it was debunked by Snopes.com by the 1980s. Site owners, Barbara and David Mickelson, reported that they had tried to promptly it to provide answers that requested private information but were unsuccessful, even when asking sexual questions explicitly. [2] While it is true that in the game with silent child mode Angela does ask for user names, ages and personal preferences to determine conversation topics, Outfit7 has said that this information is all anonymized and all personal information has been deleted from it. It is also impossible for a person to take control of what Angela says in the game, as the app is based on chat bot software. [7] In 2015, the trick was revived on Facebook, prompting online security firm Sophos and the Guardian to destroy it again. [8] Sophos employee Paul Daggin wrote on the company's blog that a message promoting the trick on Facebook was nearly 600 rampages, repetitive words, despite claims at the start that it did not have words to describe the situation. It's badly written, and the boundaries are in being illiterate and inaudible. [9] Bruce Wilcox, one of the game's programmers, has attributed the popularity of the commotion to the fact that the chat boot app in Talking Angela is very realistic. [10] However, a real concern has been raised that baby game mode may be too easy for children to turn off, which, if they do, allow them to buy coins, which can be used as currencies Play, via iTunes. [11] Disabling child mode also enables the chat feature, which still raises concerns while not connecting your children to paedophiles, according to Stuart Insert, a journalist for the Guardian. Insert wrote that in chat mode, Angela wants information such as the user's name. [8] The impact of fear significantly increased the popularity of the game, and by helping the app make it the top 10 free iPhone apps soon after the hoax is widely known in February 2015[12] and the 3 most popular for all iPhone apps at the beginning of the following month. [10] In 2017, Outfit7 removed the chat feature in response to a trick that claimed the app was created and used by paedophiles to track users, particularly targeting children. Retrieved from BIZI TAKIP EDIN this week, the one-year-old hoax about Angela's talking app being dangerous for children has been doing away on Facebook again, despite having debunked at the time, and again now. Parents can be forglow for being forgiven by the suggestion that the cutesy talking cat app is actually a front for the paedophile ring, as one hoax message claimed. So what does Talking Angela really say to your children, and is it inappropriate? The best way to find out is to actually use the app. I spent an hour in his company today: Yes, the trick is a trick. But app developer Outfit7 can do more to ensure parents feel at ease Your children are using the app. Some facts first: Talking Angela is part of a wider series of apps called Talking Tom & Friends, which has been downloaded more than 1.5bn times since 2010, and is now used by 230m people per month - many children, but also many adults. They have made a series of popular YouTube videos in partnership with Disney as well as a range of physical toys. Outfit7 is a well-known program company, not a shady network of children stuck, in other words: I interviewed the company in March 2011, March 2012 and June 2013, tracking the increase in its programs. Below, you can find out how talking Angela really works - with pictures - to help you make informed decisions about whether it's right for your children. Talking Angela has a child mode, but it's very easy to turn off. Photo: PRTurn Child Mode onTalking Angela was released for iPhone and iPad in December 2012, then in January 2013 for Android. It follows tom's previous speaking pattern and app friends: a virtual animal that squeakily repeats anything you say to your device's microphone, while interacting with him by tapping and dragging on the screen. The most important thing for parents to understand is that talking Angela is a child mode. You'll be asked if you want to turn it on for the first time you run the app, and anywhere else you can turn it on or off by tapping on a small smiling face on the top right of the screen. This is important, because the feature at the center of Facebook's scary messages - Angela's ability to text chat with users - is turned off when baby mode is toggled in. If you read about Angela asking kids for names, ages or engaging in banter about clothing exchange parties, none of this can happen if the child's mood is on. Descending from this: it's far too easy to get it on and off - there's no pin preventing a child from tapping on a smiling face and switching it on. Given the current controversy, it would be an easy but important change for Outfit7 to make. What can kids do when the child's mood is on, though? They can get Angela to repeat her words, stroke and poke her (meaning inappropriate!) to see the animated response, and birds flying on screen - don't worry, she doesn't eat them. There's also a camera feature that's hinted at some of the Facebook messages about Talking Angela. It's true that it encourages users to look at their device's camera and make certain gestures: knit, shaking heads, smiling, waving or sticking out their tongues, so Angela can copy it. YouTube comments: Not always child-friendly language. Photo: PRSome changes needed as a parent, there are some features in talking Angela that concern me, although the ones mentioned in the hoax Facebook messages. First, there's a note music button at the bottom right that's on my smartphone launching the YouTube app with the official Talking Tom and Friends channel - starting with a video trailer for I'm talking Tom mobile game. The problem here: Kids can easily move down to the comments section (sample: I don't know why there's so much to dislike and is I the only one who thought he's spelling out?, not the kind of material you want for your young kid you can also tap a button more to see suggestions from other videos, some of which are from the Outfit7 channel, and some of them aren't. Then watching those videos offers more suggestions, and so on. If you don't type the cat into the YouTube search box and then leave your child to deal with it, you shouldn't leave them without caring with Talking Angela.Next, in-app ads. If you download Angela's talking for free, it displays banner ads at the top of the screen. They generally advertise for other apps: Hotels.com, Google and (in a curveball) Department of Work and Retirement all appeared while I was using it today. Usually tapping on a banner ad takes you to its download page in the app store. Finally, in-app purchases. Talking Angela uses a system of virtual coins to buy some features: presentations and accessories for Angela, for example, from hats and handbags to makeup. Anyone who uses the app gets 25 free coins a day while others can be bought from an in-app store: from £0.69 for £4,200 to £17.49 for 146,500.Meanwhile, the app also offers free coins versus watching video ads for other apps: The Simpsons: Bugging, Knights & Knights Dragons, total reborn domination, camp battles and monster handbags for example. If you've turned on your parent store and app restrictions, your kids shouldn't be able to download free apps or make in-app purchases without your permission. Whether you feel comfortable with the high features of your decision, though. Items are purchased using virtual coins in Talking Angela. Photos: PRTText chats with AngelaFinally, what happens if you turn baby mode off - as any child can do fairly easily - and start chatting to Angela using the text box at the bottom of the screen? It's a feature that has fueled Facebook's trick. While it is certainly not connecting your children to paedophiles, it does raise some issues. These are all real questions that Angela asked me while I chatted with her: How long have you been friends with your best friend? I met my best friends at school. What will you do today? How old are you when I'm 18? What are you doing with your friends for fun? and yes, Angela at one point asks, Do you know what's fun too? a dress exchange party - Have you ever been to such a party? before he told an anecdote about how he exchanged clothes with her virtual boyfriend Tom for Japs. It ends innocently – ruffed friends and everyone at the party cheers on us. It was a fun night! - But it went out of context with some of the questions above, it's no wonder parents are terrified. He even told you that cat sex was raising hair. This purrfect if Ask him, well, cat sex. As some children surely will. Tip: Children don't mean to use Angela's talking text chat feature, however the app developer has not taken any meaningful measures to prevent them from simply toggling child mode off. There is even a swipe down with two fingers or writing this sequence of numbers as parental gateway figures that have become common in children's programs in recent months. Text chat is not aimed at talking Angela in children. Photo: PRRResponsibility on both sides of Tess is the main thing to understand about talking Angela: it's an app aimed at children and adults alike, including text chats that seem cheeky and silly for the latter, but unsuitable for the former. The problem is the lack of a strong enough barrier between the two modes. When it comes down to it, your children are still going to chat and hang their tongues on cartoon cats, falling into the clutches of pedo rings [sic] that are listed on Facebook A couple of commenters in my previous article about talking Angela hoax suggested worrying about the normal schedule of the kind of conversations that you don't want children having with strangers in the real world. This is a legitimate criticism, and one that Outfit7 should act by tougher it for kids to turn off child mode.But hoax is a reminder that as parents, we also have responsibilities to be aware of what apps our kids are using and how they work - from first-hand experience. Now, I've guided my children to other apps instead of talking Angela, but that's based on testing it for myself, rather than believing hysterical ALL-CAPS warnings posted on Facebook.* Talking developer Angela says the paedophile hoax is 'ridiculous' 'ridiculous'
